Writing a narrative

Read the story about a woman called Amber and a drink called a milkshake.

Look at the order in which the events happened because you will match the order and the events next.

A woman called Amber Jade, who started an online campaign as a joke, has seen it make £50,000 after her videos were watched by hundreds of thousands. She posted the videos on a website that is usually used by people who want to raise money for creative projects such as publishing books or making new products. In the first video that she posted, she drank a milkshake she had bought and told viewers that she'd never actually made a milkshake herself before. She then requested donations to buy the initial ingredients so she could. Lots of people liked the joke and passed the link to the video to friends. At that point, Amber decided to create T-shirts to give away to those who donated over £20. This proved popular and more and more people got involved. Realising how many potential customers were watching her videos, the Milk Marketing Council invited her to a dairy to see where milk comes from. 'I'd never milked a cow before,' Amber said, 'It was amazing.' Last month she held a music and food festival in Bath and invited all those who had donated to the campaign. Anyone who had donated over £5 received free milkshakes for themselves and two guests. Following the festival, she has begun to set up a charity using the rest of the money.

Match the event on the left with the order in which it happened.
